

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An upgradable computer system has a first software component and a second software component, in which the first and second software components operate at a current version. The computer system upgrades the first software component to an upgraded version and validates the performance of the upgraded first software component. The validation includes translating messages originating at the first software component from an upgraded version format to a current version format.

2006-10-10 10:54:41